An advisory committee has been formed to help Baltimore County residents enjoy war of 1812 bicentennial.

County Executive Jim Smith made the announcement Tuesday.

Smith says the committee will work to educate, engage and celebrate Baltimore County's War of 1812 heritage during the statewide celebration.

"We look forward to partnering with the National Park Service, Maryland Bicentennial Commission, Baltimore City Heritage Area, and local stakeholders to create a memorable program that honors our heritage and showcases our pride in the Star Spangled Banner," stated Francis Taylor, chair of the Baltimore County advisory committee.

The committee will include historian, educators and researchers.
